PREFACE.

This catalogue has involved an amount of labor which cannot be appreciated by those who have had no part in it. Sometimes four or five letters have been written in the effort to find one person; classmates, friends, relatives, post-masters, town clerks and others have been addressed, and frequently in vain. But it has been a labor of love, and the only regret of those who have had a share in it is that it is, after all, so incomplete and imperfect.

For the first time, married as well as maiden names are indexed. The maiden name, it will be seen, is given first, with residence while in school, opposite to it; on the line below, the married name and latest known address. A question mark following an address indicates a doubt of its correctness. A star indicates decease, the date of which is given, when known.

The historical sketch is almost entirely condensed from the historical sketch written by Mrs. Electa Lincoln Walton for the semi-centennial celebration, the complete text of which may be found in the printed report of that meeting.

The alumnæ are most earnestly begged to send corrections of this catalogue, or information of marriage, death or change of residence of any graduate of the school to Miss Ellen Hyde, president of the Alumnæ Association, Framingham, to Miss Mary C. Moore, secretary, Framingham, or to the school.

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

Very early in the history of Massachusetts her common school system was inaugurated, and the cause of popular education was placed upon a foundation broader and firmer than was ever before laid for it by any state or nation. But with worldly prosperity came its temptations, and the attention of her sons was turned toward the accumulation of wealth, to the temporary neglect of public interests; and while academies and private schools flourished, the common schools were overlooked and allowed to "degenerate into neglected schools for the poorer classes only," and "the best talent and education were not secured to carry them on."

From 1820 to 1830 was the gloomiest period in their history. But soon after the year 1820 a few intelligent, high-minded, strong-hearted men, who saw the great evil of the decline in popular education, began earnestly to consider the causes of that decline and to seek the remedy; and these men, one after another, soon arrived at the same conclusion, — that, while the remote cause of the decline lay in the indifference of the people generally, the immediate cause was the employment of teachers unfitted and inexperienced, who in too many instances were ignorant, not only of the best methods of teaching, but even of the subjects which they attempted to teach. The remedy for all this must be sought in the proper training of the teacher, which could best be had in seminaries set apart or established for the purpose. To substantiate their position, reference was made to normal schools already established in Prussia.

With these pioneers, right thinking implied right acting, and essays in popular journals, resolutions in teachers' meetings, and memorials to the Legislature began to awaken the people and the Legislature to realize that only by right education of the whole people could the future prosperity of the State be fully and permanently secured, and to adopt measures looking to that end.

This agitation resulted in the establishment of the Massachusetts Board of Education, in April, 1837, and the appointment of its illustrious first secretary, the president of the Senate, at their first meeting, June 29 of that year. When, by this appointment, Horace Mann stepped into the arena, the new educational era fairly began, not only for Massachusetts, but for America. Almost immediately after its establishment the Board of Education issued an address to the people, calling for conventions, which were held in every county but Suffolk, and stirred the whole community upon the subject. They also recommended the passage of a law providing for the establishment of normal schools.

Under the date of March 10, 1838, Mr. Mann wrote in his private journal: "Went to Mr. Dwight's, where a number of gentlemen were assembled to discuss the expediency of applying to the Legislature for a grant to aid in the establishment of teachers' seminaries. . . . After they had dispersed, Mr. Dwight gave me authority to propose to the Legislature, in my own way, that $10,000 should be forthcoming from himself and others; and that at any rate he would be responsible for that amount to accomplish the object, provided the Legislature would give the same amount for the same cause."

Accordingly, on Monday, March 13, 1838, Mr. Mann had the satisfaction of sending to the Legislature a communication embodying Mr. Dwight's offer, and urging its acceptance. On the 19th of April the Legislature passed resolutions accepting the gift, and authorizing the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, to draw a warrant upon the Treasurer for $10,000, to be placed at the disposal of the Board for the purpose specified in the communication.

After mature deliberation, the Board decided to establish three normal schools, — one for the north-eastern, one for the south-eastern and one for the western part of the State, to be continued three years, as an experiment; and, as the $20,000 at their disposal was not sufficient to provide for buildings, the Board made known that they would establish the schools at suitable places as soon as they should receive the requisite assistance.

Proposals were made by many towns in different parts of the State, and at a meeting of the Board, December 28, 1838, it was formally voted "to locate a normal school for the qualification of female teachers in the town of Lexington, and one at Barre for teachers of both sexes." The citizens of Lexington procured a lease of a good academic building and boarding-house for the term of three years, and placed it at the disposal of the Board; they also raised by contribution the sum of $1,000, to be expended in library, apparatus, etc., for the benefit of the school.

A circular of information was then issued, and appeared in the "Common School Journal" of March, 1839, edited by Mr. Mann, giving notice of the proposed establishment of the school at Lexington, and stating the requisites for admission. This was signed by Jared Sparks, Robert Rantoul, Jr., George Putnam and Horace Mann, visitors of the Normal School at Lexington, Boston, February 27, 1839.

The next June Rev. Cyrus Peirce of Nantucket was engaged to teach the school, saying, as he accepted the appointment, "I would rather die than fail;" and the 3d of July was appointed for the school to commence. Of Mr. Peirce's qualifications the following extract from the memoir of Horace Mann will testify: "Mr. Peirce proved to have qualifications for his vocation even beyond his (Mr. Mann's) expectations. He not only knew how to teach with precision, but he evoked from his pupils such a force of conscience as insured thorough study and assimilation of whatever was taught. When Mr. Mann first visited this school at Nantucket he was charmed by the evidence of power that the whole management and all the recitations of the school evinced; and when he spoke of it afterwards to gentlemen of the place, one of the most respectable citizens said to him that he had lived forty years on the south shore, and could always tell Mr. Peirce's scholars, whenever he met them in the walks of life, by their mode of transacting business, and by all their mental habits, which were conscientious, exact, reliable. . . . From that time Mr. Mann had his eye on him; and he always felt that to Mr. Peirce was chiefly owing the very rapid and unquestionable value, in all eyes, of this new movement."

The opening day of the first American normal school came, and with it a very heavy rain. Assembled in the reception room of the normal building were the august visitors of the school, with the newly elected principal, and before them sat three timid girls, — only three, — to be examined and enrolled as the first pupils of the first State Normal School in America. Undaunted either by the paucity of number thus presented or by the indifference of the public generally which this meager response indicated, and unawed by the mutterings of the coming storm which even then had been raised in certain quarters against the Board of Education, and which threatened this school as one of their projects, Mr. Peirce commenced his work; and so vigorously and so well did he perform it, that when at the next session of the Legislature the enemies of the movement succeeded so far as to influence the committee on education to bring in a majority report in favor of abolishing the Board of Education and normal schools, a minority of the committee and other friends presented such evidence of the good done by the Board and the Lexington Normal School that their triumph was complete, and the Legislature, by a vote of 245 to 182, sustained its former action. Hon. Henry Barnard of Connecticut once said of Mr. Peirce, and many eminent educators have since echoed the sentiment: "Had it not been for Mr. Cyrus Peirce, I consider the cause of normal schools would have failed, or have been postponed for an indefinite period."

On October 9, 1839, Mr. Peirce wrote in his diary: "The proposition for a model school meets with a flattering reception by the inhabitants, and there is encouraging prospect that the school will go into operation at the commencement of next term. Five children are to be taken from each district. If the more remote districts do not avail themselves of the overture, then a greater number is to be taken from the centre school district."

On October 23 he writes: "The model school contains thirty-three pupils, ages from six to ten; twenty-one boys and twelve girls. They have been arranged in three classes. . . . They are in the very undesirable condition of being familiar with the books, without knowing anything they contain. . . . The normal pupils will visit daily, and some of them will take the principal part of its instruction and discipline. I feel that it has added greatly to my labors and cares, but I feel also that it is a very important addition to the establishment, and one on which its success greatly depends."

The model school thus established continued to be an integral part of the normal school through its Lexington and West Newton days, but, owing to some friction with the town, was discontinued after the removal to Framingham.

Mary Swift and Mary Stoddard were, according to the records, the first pupils of the normal school who went out to teach. They did well.

The success of the early graduates of the school was most marked. They had stronger incentives for work than the pupils at any subsequent time, and they did not dare to fail. They felt that the success of the whole normal enterprise rested for the time being upon their shoulders, and they must bear it, though they were crushed beneath it.

Thus Mr. Peirce worked for three years in Lexington, performing an almost incredible amount of labor, which heavily taxed even his strong powers of endurance. Let it be remembered that there was no appropriation for assistance of any kind, and Mr. Peirce took it upon himself to supervise or actually perform the most menial services for the school. He seldom allowed himself more than four hours' sleep out of each twenty-four. He slighted nothing. He attended to the fires, he rang the school bell, he heard almost every recitation in the normal room, and visited the model room at the recesses, often actually teaching while there. With the freely given assistance of his ever-faithful wife, he examined the written exercises, the compositions, the school journals, answered the demands of his large and growing correspondence, and arranged all his plans and all the details of his every day's school duties, with a persistency and conscientiousness unsurpassed if ever equalled elsewhere. But the physical and mental strain was too great, and in 1842, at the end of three years, Mr. Peirce was obliged to resign.

The Legislature having appropriated to normal schools $6,000 a year for the next three years, Rev. Samuel J. May of South Scituate was appointed to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Peirce. He accepted the appointment on condition that he should have as an assistant Miss Caroline Tilden, a graduate of the Bridgewater Normal School, and a very brilliant and successful teacher, deducting from his own salary the sum required for hers. Under his management for the next two years the school increased in numbers from thirty-one to sixty-six, making it necessary to secure additional assistance.

Mr. May was better known as a philanthropist than as a practical educator, but he brought to the school such a breadth of Christian love, such a noble zeal for all that was good and true, that his presence seemed to his assistants and pupils a perpetual benediction. "His success in the school was complete, giving entire satisfaction to all but himself." The following extract from a letter to Mr. Mann, dated October 20, 1844, gives the key-note of his teaching. After speaking of attending a certain teachers' convention, he writes: "I ventured to address the meeting upon the management of schools, . . . and then I urged at some length that teachers should go into their schools in the spirit of Christ, meaning to seek and to save them that are lost; being especially mindful of the neglected, ill-looking, ill-dressed, ill-tempered; not wishing them away, but rejoicing to have an opportunity to do for them in school what is not done for them at home. Let this class of children be at once made to feel that they are really cared for; that they are not shunned, but sought after; not despised, but valued; not doubted, but trusted; not despaired of, but hoped for; let them be treated thus, and a prolific source of trouble in schools would be dried up. Love the unlovely, and they will put their unloveliness away."

In July, 1844, after having taught two years, Mr. May resigned to give place to Mr. Peirce, whose health was sufficiently restored to enable him to resume the duties of the office.

The school had now outgrown its quarters, and it was necessary to seek for better accommodations. The Fuller Academy building in West Newton could be bought for $1,500, but where could the $1,500 be found? Nothing daunted, Mr. Mann went into the office of his friend, Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr., and in his emphatic manner said: "Quincy, if you know any man who wants the highest seat in the kingdom of heaven, it is to be had for $1,500." An explanation followed, and Mr. Quincy gave Mr. Mann the money, directing him to take the deed in his own name, and, if the building was ever sold, to apply the proceeds to any purpose that he thought would best promote the interests of popular education. It has been said that Mr. Mann sold his law library and gave the proceeds to fit up the building. This is a mistake. Long before this Mr. Mann had sold his library to fit up the normal boarding-house in Lexington, and at this time, to meet bills that could not otherwise be paid, other sacrifices were made, and the sum of $1,300 contributed jointly by Mr. Mann and Mr. Peirce. It should here be stated that the citizens of West Newton contributed $600 also towards fitting up the building.

In April, 1849, Mr. Peirce was again compelled, by failing health incident upon his overwork and constant care, to resign the charge of the school to whose welfare he had devoted every power of his body and mind for eight years. At the festival given in his honor by the pupils of the school and the citizens of West Newton, in July, the highest educators in the State were present, and testified in unmeasured terms to his fidelity and great success. A purse of about $500 was then tendered him by his many friends, towards defraying his expenses as delegate to the Peace Congress in Paris, which convened in August; and all felt, in parting with him, that to him, if to any, belonged the eulogium, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

During the three months that intervened between the resignation of Mr. Peirce and the accession of his successor, Miss Lincoln, the first assistant of the school, performed the duties of principal, Miss Watson and Miss Shaw being assistants.

In September, 1849, Rev. Eben S. Stearns of Bedford took charge of the school. Mr. Stearns was a much younger man than either of his predecessors, but a person of large experience in teaching, having previously had charge of the Ipswich High School, the Free Street Female Seminary in Portland, and for the five previous years the Female High School in Newburyport, where he had ably conducted a teachers' class, and thus gained experience as a teacher of teachers. Mr. Stearns proved himself a fit successor of Mr. Peirce and Mr. May. He had a nature of unusual gentleness, and a winsome humor that made him a delightful companion. As a teacher he inspired confidence in his pupils to do their best, while his recognition of any ladylike refinement in them was an inspiration to be true to his expectations. It seemed impossible to be rude or heedless under his observant eye. He impressed his pupils with the dignity of the teacher's work, and his influence upon them was lasting.

During his administration the school increased in popularity till it became overcrowded, so that it became expedient to adopt more rigid examinations and to extend the requisite time for attendance.

A three-years course was then adopted. Thus the number in school was kept within a convenient limit, and the quality was improved. Printed diplomas were first given to the class of 1850.

It soon became evident that some further measures must be taken to accommodate the school, and on May 13, 1852, an appropriation of $6,000 was made by the Legislature to defray the expense of providing a more commodious site and building for the school, with the necessary appurtenances and apparatus. After some delay the Board accepted the proposition made by Framingham, and decided to locate the new school building at Framingham Centre. The town appropriated $2,500 toward the building, the president of the Boston & Albany Railroad gave $2,000 more, and inhabitants gave the land, five and three-fourths acres. The site chosen was beautiful for situation, on rising ground, affording extensive views and giving opportunity for pure air and cool summer breezes; but it was somewhat isolated from the populous towns, and two miles from the Boston & Albany Railroad, which had before made access so easy. This isolation had a marked effect upon the attendance of the school, especially after the establishment of another normal school near it and in a more convenient and populous centre.

In September, 1855, Mr. Stearns resigned, to take charge of the Female Academy at Albany, and was succeeded by Mr. George N. Bigelow. Mr. Bigelow had been principal of the high school in Clinton, and had spent the two previous years in Europe for pedagogical study. A former pupil writes: "His faithfulness in detail, his versatility of talent and acquirements, with his perfect courtesy and kindly interest, can never be forgotten;" and another writes: "His desire to help young teachers and all who needed assistance and encouragement was characteristic of him through life, and he spared neither time nor personal effort in his unselfish desire to benefit them. His ideas of teaching were advanced and progressive." No event of great moment to the school occurred during his administration. It continued in its even course of useful service, and sent out many well fitted for their work.

After the summer term of 1865 Mr. Bigelow was absent from the school for a few months, on account of illness. He resigned in September, 1866, and was succeeded by his first assistant, Miss Annie E. Johnson.

The new principal, Miss Johnson, had been Mr. Bigelow's assistant since 1861, and had shown herself fully competent to succeed him, having admirably directed the school during his absence the previous year. Miss Johnson was born in a little town in Maine, where, under the guidance of her father, a Presbyterian clergyman, was laid the foundation of her intellectual and spiritual growth. The family subsequently removed to Brunswick, and there she was favored by the college atmosphere, as well as by the direct instruction of more than one college professor. Previous to her appointment as assistant of this school she had taught in several private day and boarding schools, and in the public schools in Brunswick, of every grade, from the primary to the high, and as principal of the high school. In their next annual report after her appointment, the visitors say: "In one thing the visitors of the Framingham school take special satisfaction in offering this their report of its condition the last year; and that is, in the entire success of its management by a female principal and female assistants." Miss Johnson served as principal from 1866 to 1875, when she left to take charge of the Bradford Academy.

Among the changes that marked Miss Johnson's administration were the enlargement of the school building, the establishment of the boarding-house, and the re-establishment of the practice school, which had been discontinued since the removal to Framingham. At the beginning of her administration Miss Johnson secured a class of children to attend the normal school for instruction; then she started a little school in one small room, which grew to twenty pupils.

When Miss Hyde took charge of the school, in 1875, she made the practice school a special requisite of normal training, and it has since then grown year by year in size, in excellence and in public favor. In 1875 it was the only practice school in Massachusetts, and it had to stand against the criticism and ridicule of the other normal schools; now every normal school in the State has its practice school, and recognizes it as an essential factor in normal training.

Crocker Hall was built in 1886 as an additional home for the students, but was partially destroyed by fire on Christmas, 1887. Early in the next year the Legislature appropriated $105,000 for repairs on the hall, and the erection of a new school building, which was named May Hall, in honor of Miss Abby W. May, the revered and beloved chairman of the Board of Visitors, who had died during its construction.

The most noteworthy event of Miss Hyde's administration was the celebration of the semi-centennial anniversary, on July 2, 1889. Over five hundred of the alumnæ were present, among them several members of the honored first class. After business meetings and class reunions in the then new May Hall, they marched in procession to the Congregational church, where a luncheon was served, and the formal exercises of the day were held. These consisted of an address of welcome, and response ; an oration by Hon. W. T. Harris, U. S. Commissioner of Education ; and an historical sketch by Mrs. George A. Walton, from which this sketch is condensed, with many omissions and very few alterations and additions. An evening reception in Crocker Hall concluded the exercises. The semi-centennial weather was charming, and the celebration was one to be long and pleasantly remembered by those who had the happiness of joining in it.

In 1898, Miss Hyde, finding it impossible to carry on the school under then-existing conditions, resigned her position, and was succeeded by Mr. Henry Whittemore. In the same year the heirs of Mrs. Augustus Hemenway, wishing to give up the Hemenway School of Household Arts, offered it on very liberal terms to the State. The Board of Education accepted the offer, and that institution was incorporated with the Framingham school, of which it has since been a valuable and valued part.

In these later days of prosperity and popularity it is good to look back to the earlier days of the school ; it is wholesome for us to see on how small an amount of money the strong foundations were laid, but with what wealth of lofty ideals, hard work and devoted self-sacrifice. In the pages which follow are catalogued the names of many of whom the world was not worthy, and who, being dead, yet speak. They say to us, — their successors, "keep abreast with all true progress of the present, but do not forget the noble traditions of the past. So may the old school come to her centennial day — her millennial, if may be — with her spiritual eye undimmed and her moral strength unabated, crowned with the honors of age, but keeping still the vigor of an immortal youth."
